To Be Interned in Concentration Camp By the Nazis

AN ANTI-JEWISH DRIVE

Blum Government Authorizes Credits As Special Funds For Defense

By International News Service
VIENNA, Mar. 17.—Despite earlier plans to place Kurt Schuschnigg on trial as a traitor, Austro-German authorities today decided to intern him in a concentration camp as a widespread anti-Jewish drive was launched throughout this newest province of the Reich.

Decision to place the deposed Chancellor in a concentration camp was reached at a lengthy conference of Nazi leaders. Plans actually had gotten under way to put him and numerous other anti-Nazis on trial, but it was decided this might have the effect of picturing him in the light of a fallen hero.

PARIS, Mar. 17.—Premier Leon Blum's government today authorized immediate credits of 4,465,000,000 francs as a special fund for additional national defense.

This amount exceeds the sum sought by the previous Chautemps government by 1,250,000,000 francs.

After a momentous two-hour session, the ministerial council issued a communique which said 3,465,000,000 francs would be spent for increasing the French air force, 600,000,000 for the army, and 400,000,000 for the navy.

LONDON, Mar. 17.—Opposition elements launched a sudden and intensive drive today to force Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain to adopt a stronger stand regarding both Czech and Spain or resign in favor of a coalition government.

Word was spread in well informed circles, that a serious cabinet crisis is developing.

PARIS, Mar. 17.—Caspé, key city of the Spanish Aragon front, has been completely occupied by rebel forces, according to reports received here today from Burgos, capital of the Spanish insurgent regime.

The government authorized immediate credit totalling $178,600,000 for expansion of the army, navy and air force, and laid plans for a revised budget to embrace the hugest military expenditures since the war.

OVER 200 TO PARTICIPATE AT BENSALAM EXHIBIT

Fifth Annual "Gym" Exhibition To Be Presented Tomorrow Evening

20 SEPARATE ACTS

By Louis Tomlinson

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Mar. 17.—Over 200 students is the given number expected to take part in Bensalem High School's fifth annual gym exhibition to be presented in the local school gymnasium here tomorrow night.

Twenty distinct and separate acts will go to make the show the biggest and best exhibition the school has ever undertaken with a little bit of everything thrown in to add color and interest in the entertainment. There will be, besides apparatus work, drills, dances, marches, games, races, novelties and a sport tableaux to top off two full hours of enjoyment. This is what will keep the some 200 or more students active throughout the evening and what they have been kept busy at for the past month or so in order to put the show over. The program is being held under the direction of coach George Reimer and coach Helen Smith, who have devoted much of their time during the winter months to provide this unique bit of entertainment. During the illness for the past few weeks of Miss Smith, Miss Elizabeth Dildine has been ably filling in to help out in the girls' parts.

To pick any one or more acts, from the twenty listed for the show, as the most outstanding on the program would be a hard task but a few of the acts that will carry much amusement and entertainment for all are the baseball rhythm exercise, the relay races, obstacle race, square dance, apparatus work and the sport tableaux.

The baseball exercise, called "Take Me Out To The Ball Game," is presented by a group of seventh grade boys who go through rhythmic exercises and motions imitating those seen in a ball game. The relay races will include a variety of three all in one. These are called the club race, Jake and Lena race, and the bean and loli race with four teams of 12 on a slide competing. They will be humorous, since it is something different, and will be presented by the eighth grade boys and girls. The obstacle race is given by the Senior High girls and includes climbing over, going through, around and under various obstacles placed in their path to the finish line. This will be something on the order of a cross-country race. The Junior girls and boys are putting on the old-fashioned square dance which is called the Virginia reel. Apparatus work will include exercises by both girls and boys of the Senior High and Junior High boys on all pieces. The girls will perform on the parallel bars, rings and horse; while the boys will work on the parallel bars, traveling rings, and spring board pieces. There will also be tumbling exercises for both boys and girls.

The sport tableaux includes three members from each of the five boys' sport teams at Bensalem who will step into the spotlight in tableau form first individually then altogether at the conclusion of the act. The dances include social tap dance, folk dance and

WHY NOT "ICE" THE DOG?

(By the Stroller)

A Middletown Township family is cake-conscious this week. The daughter of the household arose early Tuesday morning to bake a cake before she left for school. The said cake was for a party in a nearby church that evening. As the cake in all its goodness rested in the kitchen the family dog discovered it, and promptly ate most of it.

The mother of the household promised she would bake a cake to replace the first one, which she promptly did. After the icing had been applied the cake was placed in the dining-room, and a short time later after hearing the dog lick his "chops" investigation proved that the second cake had gone the way of the first.

The third cake baked that day did not inspire increased love for the family pet.

"I AM A 'STRADDLER'" IS SUBJECT FOR A SERMON DELIVERED BY THE REV. HOWARD L. ZEPP AT SUNDAY SERVICE; IS FORCEFULLY PRESENTED

Text is Taken From the First Chapter of Acts, The Eighth Verse

IS HERE PUBLISHED

"Ye Shall Be Witnesses Unto Me . . . Unto Uttermost Part of The Earth"

For a most forceful sermon, delivered to his congregation in First Baptist Church, Sunday, the Rev. Howard L. Zepp had as his subject, "I Am A 'Straddler.'" The text was Act 1:8: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The sermon in its entirety follows: What kind of a witness? First of all, and first in all, a spiritual witness. The testimony of the saving power of God is the work of pure religion and reality in religion. Our whole religious life flows from the spring of spiritual awakening, spiritual vision, spiritual baptism, spiritual power. We cease to be religious when we substitute social and humanitarian service for the great spiritual experiences of the gospel of grace. First of all, and most of all, we must be concerned with that which is spiritual. But we dare not stop here. A Christian has secondary duties which concern his relations of righteousness to his fellow men—purity, good-will, truthfulness, honesty, liberality. Men estimate the worth of our religion upon the evidence of its morality, not upon its spirituality. Your fellows can see your conduct and can tell very accurately what kind of a citizen, neighbor, husband or father you are. They can judge very well of your honesty, truthfulness, purity and self-control. You can easily feign a spirituality which you do not possess, but you cannot deceive your fellow men about your actual conduct. Real spirituality outranks everything else in religion but the eye of man sees only the externals of your life and thus judges you. If your religion does not meet this test, it need not appeal to anything else. If the suit have lost its savor, it is therefore good for nothing but to be cast out and to be trodden under foot of men. The eyes of the world are on the church's outward life and we do well to remember Paul's exhortation that they which believe should be careful to maintain good works.

Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, spiritual witnesses, moral witnesses, but more. The follower of Christ will follow his Master on into the values of life as set forth by Him and by the prophets—not only to do justly but also to love mercy. Mercy represents relief of need and provision for the

GIVE SOME REASONS FOR POPULATION SLOWDOWN

Dr. George A. Walton, George School, Addresses Kiwanis Club of Doylestown

TO ANSWER FIVE ISSUES

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 17.—Addressing the weekly dinner meeting of the Kiwanis Club of Doylestown last night, Dr. George A. Walton, principal of George School, gave some reasons why there is a definite "slowing down" of the population of the United States. The well-known educator, who has been at George School for 39 years, said that later marriages, employment of women, the greater economic freedom of women, birth control, increasing standards and costs of living and the decreasing earning capacity of children, are bringing about population trends and a decreased slowing down of population.

Five issues that arise from population changes have to be answered, Dr. Walton said. They are:

"How can we improve our population of more adults and fewer children?"

"How can we bring the better educated, the more cultured people to place more value on family life?"

"How can we give a better educational opportunity to the children of the region that is on a lower economic level and to the center where a great number of children are born?"

"We know how to apply science to industry but the problem of the employment of men in middle life, who are losing their jobs as a result of scientific and mechanical advancement, has not been solved."

"The problem of apprentice training is not being developed in America."

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

The Colonel Points the Way

Washington, March 17. THOSE WHO hate bunk and are sick of the China Eggs of politics should read the speech of Col. Frank Knox delivered Tuesday before the Republican State Convention in North Carolina. The bluntness of the colonel's language may have been due to the fact that he is not now a candidate and is unhampered by the restrictions of a weasel-worded platform.

HOWEVER, it is stimulating to find a man who, before a political convention, divests himself of partisanship and presents the truth

ADDITION IS TO BE MADE TO THE HIGH SCHOOL BLDG.

Includes Fire Tower Stairway, Lockers, Dressing Rooms, and Class Room

ON THE WEST END

Alterations Are Also To Be Made to End of Gymnasium Building

The Bristol public school board will, in a few days, advertise for bids covering the erection of a small addition to the high school building, situated at the corner of Wilson avenue and Garfield street.

For several years the board has been considering the deplorable sanitary conditions which exist at the high school building, but was unable to evolve a plan whereby the conditions could be improved. Last year, however, an architect was consulted, and the matter given careful consideration. Application was made to the federal government for assistance through either the P. W. A. or W. P. A., but the request was refused. As a last resort the school board has decided to make the improvements and float a bond issue to cover the cost. "The board does not contemplate any increase in the tax rate, but as soon as economic conditions improve, will make a strenuous effort to collect the head tax which is woefully delinquent," states a member of the board.

The improvement will consist of the erection of an addition at the west end of the present buildings, which will fill in completely the triangular opening which now exists. The addition will contain a fire tower stairway leading up to the top story. On the lower floor will be located the boys' athletic locker and dressing room. The second floor will contain lavatories for the boys and girls of the higher departments. On the third floor an additional class room will be provided.

Alterations will also be made to the end of the gymnasium building. The stairway under the gallery at the end of the auditorium will be taken away and the partition moved forward to the edge of the gallery. Then the present boys' and girls' dressing rooms and the space occupied by the stairway will be transformed into one large room to be used as a girls' athletic and locker room.

The changes made in the main corridors on the top floors, and the elimination of the stairway under the gallery in the auditorium, will permit the enlargement of the small classroom in the gallery to normal size and add seven or eight feet to the library room on the top floor.

The bids are to be opened at the meeting of the school board to be held April 5th, and the work is expected to be completed during the vacation period.

DARK DAYS IN EUROPE

The best editorial comment on the World Situation—which is to say, the Antics of Adolf—is contained in the news columns of this newspaper from day to day. As the reader's eyes race through the news dispatches from Vienna, from London, Paris, Prague, Moscow and Rome, his reaction to developments on the dictator-cursed continent of Europe supplies a more timely editorial comment than can be printed on this page.

Napoleon never swallowed a Nation with the finesse displayed by Hitler in the absorption of what was once Austria into Hitlerland. Such rapidity of conquest would have been impossible as recently as ten years ago. Only complete mechanization of the forces of conquest made it possible now.

No wonder statesmen of London, Paris, Prague and other civilized spots on the Globe are amazed. Fully awake to the Hitler menace at last, they now wonder what was wrong with the alarm clock. Until now they professed belief in the impossibility of a maniac who looks like a film comic developing into a World menace. They were grievously mistaken, as they now realize to a man.

Will Czechoslovakia be next to fall before the scourge of dictatorship? France says she will fight if Hitler makes a move in the direction of Prague and wants to know whether Britain will, too. The democratic nations are faced with the problem of how to survive without engaging in a bloody, costly conflict with dictatorial militarism. Viewed from the shores of the United States, the problem seems to be one that has no answer.

HONORS THOROUGHLY WON

Whether a duty devolves on the popular artist to contribute to the elevation of public morals is a matter of endless controversy. The artist disavows any such obligation to himself. But a large and courageous body of lay opinion judges him an attempt to regulate him in the light of the effect of his creations on popular sensibilities and morals.

Both, fortunately, can co-exist with whole hearts to the award made by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the finest screen performances of 1937. The Academy represents all that is sophisticated in the industry. But once a year it sits around a table and votes accolades for outstanding distinction in the various lines of film endeavor, and its conclusions are regularly, if curiously, like the average picture goer's.

The best performance by an actor, it agrees, was Spencer Tracy's portrayal of a Portuguese sullen, simple grandeur of courage in adversity, of loyalty and decency and every value that men cherish in man. The best performance by an actress, says the Academy, was Luise Rainer's in portraying a Chinese who, a creature of faith and fortitude, of truth and strength, whose plain, expressive face was lighted with an inward beauty and grace. In no wedding of the eternal virtues with great artistry, Hollywood is at its best—best for those who look to it for surcease from the day's cares and best for Hollywood.

The old family mirror was not hard to look at in the day of the coal-oil lamp. Then came electric light and the older generation began to note the ravages of the electricity years.

doubt, it's better to do right"—particularly applies. The right thing for them happens also to be the expedient thing.

FIFTY years the New Deal has been using public funds to coddle great masses of voters. The notion that these can be weaned away by promises is absurd and it is craven and unworthy to rest hope of success upon a deeply disappointed people turning blindly to the Republicans as the only alternative to an Administration which has deceived them. There is reason to believe that an increasing number of voters feel deeply on these problems and that they will respond to the party or candidate dealing with them frankly and honestly. At least, they will respond if it can.

IN EFFECT, what Colonel Knox said on these four points is what most men in politics would say if they were not afraid. First, he denounced the Social Security Act as a horrible muddle, not only inoperable, confused and discriminatory, involving an army of jobholders and unfairly distributed burdens, but carrying with it the seeds of disintegration. He urged a complete rewriting of the act, after study, adoption of the simple British administrative method, a reserve of not more than a billion dollars and a pay-as-you-go policy. In the matter of relief, Colonel Knox asserted that relief funds are now used for political purposes to a shocking degree; that as now administered there is huge waste and flagrant fraud; that the present method undermines character and costs twice as much as it should. His proposal is to turn all relief administration over to State and local communities, with the Federal Government granting funds in proportion to the needs of the States. "I will," he said, "never let the relief problem out of politics until it is removed from Federal control and put back where it belongs."

AS TO the Farm Control Act, the colonel voiced a blistering indictment and predicted a humiliating and costly failure. He proposed a new form of subsidy or legislation. On the contrary, he urged his party to take away from industry its monopolistic protection through excessive tariff rates, declaring his belief that if once this were done both the necessity for farm subsidies would be removed and the demand disappear. In brief, he urged a reduced tariff and a simple policy of soil preservation and farm credit without bounties or bonuses or quotas or crop control. The soundness of this proposition is not easy to dispute, but if anyone in politics has made it before, it cannot now be recalled. Certainly, no Republican has made it.

FINALLY, Colonel Knox hammered the Wagner Labor Act, called for its modification so as to prevent it being operated in the interests of the C. I. O., insisted upon the principle of collective bargaining, but demanded that it be linked with real labor-union responsibility. He further asserted that the right to work is as vital as the right to strike and that the worker who does not belong to a union is as much entitled to protection against being exploited by labor leaders as the union workman is against the exploiting type of employer.

IT IS NOT that what the colonel said on these four subjects is so new, but that it is new to have it said by a party man to a party convention. For nearly five years now men in politics have been afraid to speak out on these matters for fear of alienating the subsidized groups. Colonel Knox says—and it is true—that it is idiotic to be mealy-mouthed in the hope that these coddled voters can be weaned away from the Santa Claus side. The sensible thing for the opposition is to stop being afraid of these voters and take its stand for the interests of the country as a whole. If the stop isn't made sometime, somewhere, they ultimately will ditch the nation. The colonel has pointed the way for his party at least to achieve self-respect. That's the practical way is that if it can't win this way, it can't win at all. So what has it to lose by "doing right"?

CHAPTER XXXII

Human sounds penetrated the stillness. Loud snoring, deep breathing, gurgling, coughing. Muffled footsteps in the carpeted aisle. Gaines lay in rigid agony. He stopped just beside him. He felt that eyes penetrated the thick curtain. The steps moved on, more nearly into the rubber-floored corridor. Gaines breathed again with pained relief.

Finally a bell changed in the distance, the locomotive panted, voices shouted, the train glided away. Lights flashed, dim and bright, into the moving windows; sudden darkness, then light. At length, a prolonged darkness. Quiet, save for the clamor of the rushing train.

Gaines ventured to peer out. No one in sight. He waited for a discreet time. Silence. Deserted aisle and corridor. He opened the curtains, darted across the aisle, lifted the curtains of number 3, and dropped into his own berth with vast relief. Fool he had been to venture such a thing. He had let his infatuation for the little blonde overrule his good sense. Never let that happen again, he vowed. He was lucky that no one had caught him where he didn't belong, or had seen him prowling around.

He did not remember that the power which so nearly had caused him ruin was that same power which has led emperors to renounce thrones, has made paupers of princes and fools of wise men. Nor did he know that two eyes in the car had watched his every movement with amusement as well as satisfaction.

So great was his relief from the torture of the past half hour of anxiety that he soon slept soundly, as did the rest of the passengers in car 74X. But there was one fewer passenger in the car. Upper 6 was vacant.

Jake started up from his sleep and peered about him in the semi-darkness. He still expected, every time he awakened, to find himself in his own brass-rail bed at home, in the room where the familiar blue roses on the wallpaper remained fresh and cheerful the year 'round, through blighting January snows and withering July suns. He was cold now, and for an instant almost loosed out of bed to cross the room and close the window where the cold wind would be billowing the starched lace curtains out like full sails.

But there was only one small window, raised a few inches. It didn't seem possible that so much cold air could force itself through so small an opening. And considering the torrid heat of the afternoon just past, it was still less plausible. Quiver how, when people were too warm, they imagined they would prefer to suffer any degree of cold. And when they were cold, they vowed they would never again complain of the heat. Jake drew his ponderous gold watch and chain from beneath his pillow and peered at its face in the dim light. Only three o'clock. He had mistaken the strident clamor of a crossing bell for the imperative voice of his own alarm clock. Martha was sleeping soundly, and somewhat audibly. He smiled to himself with fond amusement, recalling her frequent reproaches as to his own snoring slumbers. He tried to sleep again, but in vain.

Finally he crept out and shuffled to the dressing room. He expected to find no one there to dispute his privacy, but as he opened the door, the inner curtains swung apart with the current of air, and Jake saw that the room was occupied. He hesitated for an instant, then stepped inside. The man was dressed and seemed to be packing his bag, which was not so disturbing to Jake's desire for privacy. But in that instant between his discovery of the room's occupant and his entrance, Jake had noticed that the man was handling papers, not clothing.

He turned abruptly when Jake entered, and looked at him as if startled. Then he laughed easily, but snapped the bag shut instantly, as if he had just finished his work. But the gesture appeared too hasty to Jake's discerning eye. The man was Kirby Elliott.

"Good morning," he greeted Jake pleasantly. "You must be an early riser."

"You're not oversleeping yourself," Jake returned abruptly. "Must be getting' on soon."

"Yes, I am. At San Bernardino." He jerked at his tie, examined his face more closely in the mirror, then said jauntily, "Well, goodbye, and good luck."

"Same to you," Jake grunted, and gave him a sidelong glance. They were not due at San Bernardino for about two hours, yet.

Kirby swung out the door and Jake, stopping the self-closing door before it snapped shut, observed that he did not return to the car, but turned down the corridor in the opposite direction.

Presently, Jake returned to his own section and crept in stealthily beside Martha. His excitement seethed, his faded eyes glittered in the faint light. He touched his wife's arm, shook it lightly. She started up, trying to adjust herself to her surroundings.

"What's the matter, Jake?" Martha demanded. "Are we almost there? Is it time to get up? Seems awful dark, yet."

"No, 'tain't time to get up. But listen, Martha! I just now seen the queerest things goin' on. An' I've got my suspicions. What would you say if I was to be the one to ketch that bond robber?"

"Well, I reckon I won't say anything until you've done it," Martha always was conservative. She was calm now, recalling that any small excitement always set Jake in a flurry, as a gust of wind flutters snowflakes.

"There you go—always 'discouragin' me," He sounded as if he might not confide his news to her after all. But he knew that any woman would hang herself with curiosity, given enough of that fatal rope.

"Land sakes! What do I keer how many rubbers you ketch. I might even be able to help you, ef you'd tell me what your suspicions be."

Jake cast her a sidelong glance, but decided that he was just as anxious to confide in her as she was to have his confidence.

So he told her what he had seen. She listened eagerly, but her final comment was not warm words of praise. "Well, I don't see as that's so much to get excited over. Anybody on a train has a right to get off wherever they please. An' most men carry lots o' papers with them. Don't seem to me as ef that chap could be a robber. I like his looks."

"Huh!" Jake snorted, "it's them kind of looks that always is deceivin', and that git away with crooked things like that. Didn't it say he was a employee of the bank, and don't he look just like one o' them fellows that act so smart behind their cages when they take your money and count it out for you? I always do feel kinda like I'd never lay eyes on it again, when they stack it up in piles and lay it away in a drawer with a grin, like they was satisfied."

"Well, 'course, 'tis possible, I reckon," she admitted reluctantly. "But what d'you spose I should do, now? Who should I tell about what I just seen?"

"That colored man?" she suggested. "He seems right helpful about everything."

"No, I don't think so. He knows plenty about his own work, but he ain't got no authority, I don't reckon. Seems like the conductor might be the right one to tell."

"But this is the middle of the night, an' you wouldn't want to wake him for somethin' that might not be important."

"How kin anybody tell how important it might be? Any clue to crime is always valuable, and any feller who has charge of this here train ought to be glad to know about it, night or day, when the whole government is after a passenger on his train."

There was some discussion as to how the conductor should be summoned. Jake thought that he should hunt him up personally, but decided that would be too much responsibility to assume. Martha suggested that the proper procedure was to call Mose first.

So Jake gave the electric button between the windows a timid poke with his forefinger and half dreaded the results it would bring. After what seemed an interminable time, however, Mose came shambling, as curious as he was sleepy. Something very unusual must have happened in lower 4. It was the first time that bell had been used during the trip.

He shook the curtain. "Yes, suh, did yoh-all want sumpin'?"

Jake emerged. "Why, I was wonderin'. Could I see the conductor right away?"

disadvantaged. It is "social service." Because of a halting church in this great field, this Christ-like ministry was taken up by charitable, fraternal and benevolent associations and orders. We have no Baptist hospital in the Philadelphia area comparable to the Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian hospitals and it stands to our denominational shame. We have a Baptist Home, a Baptist Orphanage and it is well. To study the common good, to seek for social justice and for the maximum opportunity for every one, is to act in the spirit of Christ and to do the work of Christ.

Ye shall be witnesses unto Me. As such witnesses, have we any reason to be interested in industrial and economic matters? Human life is not only interested but very deeply concerned; the welfare, usefulness and happiness of men are concerned. How can the Christian be unconcerned and fail to take the truths of the Bible and apply them? Where shall the witnessing of the Church stop? The Church must be interested in the question of immigration, international relationships, international good-will. It has a real message about racial unity. It has a high service to render in the prevention of war and in the preservation of world peace. The Christian life is not a single-track road. It has its highways, its hedges, its main streets, its back alleys, its pulpits, its counting houses, its hospitals, its grand juries, its ballot-box, its playground. This has been the faith and the ideal of the Church even though divided by doctrinal shibboleths into multiplied denominations and this faith and ideal of service has resulted in a strange accomplishment in the life of the Church. Twenty years ago, I believe, we were nearer unity than ever before in the history of Protestantism, we were on the verge of pooling our strength. Today all thoughts of unity have vanished as each denomination is a house divided against itself.

In every ecclesiastical field there is one camp led by the ministers, which has substituted social and humanitarian service for the spiritual experience of the gospel of grace. They call themselves modernists. Among other things, they have changed Jesus Christ from God to man. They have utterly ruined the influence of the Church as a religious institution. The modernist is as useless as a witness for God as a dried up spring for slacking thirst. The source of supply is gone—the empowerment of the Holy Spirit through faith in Christ and His atoning sacrifice.

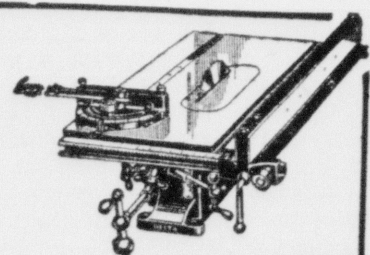

At the other end of every denominational battlefield is another camp led by the ministers, which has determined to take up arms against modernism. They call themselves fundamentalists and they are right, up to a point, but their rightness is fore-shortened. In a zeal of opposition to modernism, as a witness to the true faith, stands the demand of individual, personal spiritual experience of the gospel of grace but the spurning of all social and humanitarian work in the name of Christ as a duty of the Church of Christ which must remain separate and aloof—a purely spiritual institution.

Let us use the analogy of a tree with its roots, trunk, limbs and branches. The most vital part is the root system and well represents the spiritual. The trunk will call the moral; let the limbs represent the social ministries of the kingdom and the branches all other services which touch human life. It is all one tree. Modernism is a tree without roots. It is utterly impossible for it to be a living organism. Fundamentalism is a root system without a tree. It is a powerful living organism but it is not a tree.

In between these two camps on every ecclesiastical battlefield, marches the main denominational army. A new word has been coined for these soldiers of the cross, "straddlers." It is a misnomer; they are a new generation of non-conformists. They have never lost sight of the Lord Jesus and His spiritual ministry in their endeavor to leaven the whole of human life; nor have they lost the vision of world service in a smug satisfaction of personal spiritual experience. With arrows in their backs from the opposing camps of their own soldiery, they are determined to stay in the middle of the road and to witness for the Lord Jesus Christ to the remotest isles of mankind's interest.

That Christianity is a gospel for the individual is essential and comes first of all; but Christianity is also a gospel for society and society will never be any better until society appropriates that gospel. Society will continue to refuse the gospel presented by a Church which demonstrates by its own life how little it has been controlled by the gospel that it cannot, within itself, maintain a fraternity but presents to the world an open fight. It has become the regular and expected program of fundamentalist pulpits and fundamentalist Bible conference platforms to "lambaste" the ministers, church officials and denominational authorities who fail to agree with them to the last "jot and tittle." Spirituality and reason are not easy to balance and nothing is so capable of producing fanatical obsession as religion.

Unfortunately young people are easily swung to extremes by merely attending churches, summer camps and winter conferences conducted by those who have lost the balance of right and reason. Young people want religion and too often while the church is running a sham entertainment program, the young people are laughing at it, and are slipping out the back door, starved for that which it is the church's first business to give. A very "hard boiled," though quite respectable, boy said to me: "I can have plenty of good times outside the church, better than in it, if I am looking for a good time. But where can you get religion? If I go to church Sunday night, the minister is reviewing the latest novel." No sincere follower of the Lord Jesus Christ denies that this condition exists and is even wide spread. But why must the churches be to spiritually minded and desirous of teaching real religion, go to the opposite extreme of becoming too religious? So religious that they get the "holier than thou" consciousness; a congregation of Bible literalists whose literalism results in the strangest accomplishments of morality and spiritual snobbery.

In conclusion, modernism is a dry rot; it cannot endure because it has no source of life. It is not a living organism. Fundamentalism is a living and growing organism. I believe, therefore, there is no greater liability to the church than the ultra-fundamentalist. The modernist, the worldling in the church is a real liability but there is a chance to work on him. But the "sanctified," the "holy," no method seems to be successful to de-spiritualize the "over-blessed." The church which wants to follow its denominational ideal, to keep its vision of world service, to witness for Jesus Christ spiritually, morally, socially, economically, industrially, civically, politically, until human life is leavened with the gospel of the Son of God; the church which wants to hold to a sane, middle course, willing to be called a "straddler," though in truth a real non-conformist; the church which hopes to carry out its full mission unitedly and free from contention, that church must keep its house in order. If the pendulum has not swung too far toward an obsession, there is a chance to correct its balance. If the individual has allowed himself to become "spiritually obsessed," better withdraw the hand of fellowship because there is no cure. For those who prefer to argue, I am willing to grant that the most ultra-type of fundamentalism is possibly altogether right; I will grant, for the sake of argument, that the rapid spread of fundamentalism is an evidence of God's favor instead of a growing condition of human fear caused by world events. I cannot grant that the fundamentalist evidences Christianity with his determined effort to convert or disrupt the church and even the denomination of which it is a part. God can and does use all kinds of vessels; I would not deny a place for the most rabid fundamentalist. But let it be realized that the favor of God also rests very noticeably on the "unsanctified" Church whose good works stand where all men can see and glorify the Father in heaven. If the fundamentalist was as spiritual and as Christian as he himself claims to be, why does he not demonstrate more of the Christian graces and, above all, seek a like-minded fellowship instead of contending against and hampering the work of that church and its denomination which has been building its monuments of righteousness through generations.

Says Bristol Man Hauled Illicit Liquor

numerous samples of seized liquor. M. R. Meyers, an enforcement agent of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board, described a raid staged at the farm of Dominick Kluznick, alias Kay, 14 miles from Bristol, in July, 1934. Doylestown police co-operated in the raid according to Meyers.

The government's witness testified the raiders seized an 18-foot high still in operation, specially built into the basement of the farm house and 20 five-gallon cans of alcohol. The dwelling portion of the property was divided, half of which was occupied by William Dmoch, his wife, and five children. Dmoch, a defendant, insisted he took no part in the rings activities.

Russell McCurdy, of Bristol, truck driver and defendant, testified he was employed by Gus Avella, another defendant, to watch an apparently unoccupied property in Beverly, N. J., in which a still was secreted. In March, 1935, during his employment, McCurdy said both Avella and his brother, Bert, and Jack Varsalone visited the place.

George Rasmussen, who had pleaded guilty to operating a still on a rented farm in Burlington County, N. J., testified yesterday that he sold his entire daily output of 60 to 70 gallons to a man named Avella, of Bristol. The price quoted was $5 to $7 per five-gallon can. According to Rasmussen, it was Russell McCurdy, Bristol, who picked up the alcohol and delivered it to various destinations. McCurdy pleaded guilty.

NUTRITION EXHIBIT SHOWS LOW-COST MENUS

The annual nutrition exhibit at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York City, recently featured a demonstration of how a family of five can eat wisely and well on a daily budget of only $1.25.

The exhibit also included special diets for overweight and thin women, prepared by graduate students.

The low-cost diet for the family of limited means stresses bulk and wholesomeness, rather than quality. The instructor, Dr. Clara Mae Taylor, declared that it compared favorably with the more expensive diets in the food elements necessary to health.

As an added economy, preparation of the three meals in the exhibit required no oven heat. With the total cost of $1.25 based on average retail food prices in New York City, a day's typical menus for father, mother, a boy of fourteen, a girl of nine, and a boy of four, were:

Breakfast: Prunes, oatmeal, milk for children, coffee for adults.

Luncheon: Macaroni and cheese, shredded cabbage salad, peanut butter sandwiches, applesauce, milk.

Dinner: Hamburgers, escalloped tomatoes, bread and butter, chocolate rice pudding and milk.

Although low-cost menus worked out by city dietitians contain all the food essentials, the experts declare that their hardest problem is to persuade families on relief to use these simple meal schedules.

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

THE GRAND

Everyone in the United States possessed of a radio has undoubtedly heard that big weekly broadcast called which has been the most popular air program for the last three years.

"Hollywood Hotel," supposedly originating from an immense and luxurious hostelry in the capital of Filmland.

And now "Hollywood Hotel," in the form of a musical comedy, is coming to the Grand Theatre Thursday and Friday as a presentation from Warner Bros. It is not merely an episode entertainment, like its namesake of the ether-waves, but a fully-plotted dramatic show with a star-studded cast.

Dick Powell has the most important part—that of a young crooner who comes to Hollywood with promises of a movie job, and gets into all sorts of difficulties before he wins success.

The Lane sisters, Lola and Rosemary, have the leading feminine roles. Lovella Parsons, famed dramatic critic and originator of the "Hollywood Hotel" air show, plays herself in the picture, acting as mistress of ceremonies.

Then, too, there are Benny Goodman's Band and Raymond Paige's orchestra. What swing fan could ask for more?

PROPER TRAINING OF CHILDREN CALLS FOR SOME FIRM RULES

By Miss Edna Stephany (Home Economics Representative)
Parents want to help their children to grow strong both mentally and physically. To aid them, a few suggestions are offered that parents may follow.

In guiding the child to form good habits, connect them with pleasant associations. Trying to force a child to eat a new food and having the act followed by a crying spell or temper tantrum will probably result in his never liking that food. Be sympathetic with your child. Make sure that he knows what you mean. His disobedience may be due to the lack of understanding of your request.

Children like to imitate their "grown-ups." Make sure your actions are worthy of imitation. Do not express your dislikes of certain foods and then expect the child to like them.

If a child refuses to eat, and it is only his way of getting attention, pay no particular attention to him. Refrain from giving him special favors. Withhold his dessert until he has eaten a reasonable amount of his main course. Do not make an issue of his refusal to eat and wait until the next regular meal before giving him anything else. By that time he will probably eat whatever is put before him.

Avoid scolding and nagging children. It is irritating and often spoils an otherwise good disposition. Be calm, firm, and consistent in training children. Never threaten or bribe them. If a rule is enforced to-day and overlooked tomorrow, the child loses respect for family law and order.

SALEM, O., Mar. 17.—(INS)—An escort bureau has been established here, but it isn't like the metropolitan ones for bored women—it is to encourage church-going.

Rev. S. Talmage Magann, pastor of the First Baptist Church, inaugurated an escort service for young persons wishing to attend services.

He started the movement with a talk on "How Love Found a Way," telling of his own experiences in courtship.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE MAY ADD CLUBS TO ROSTER

Following the policy adopted several seasons ago, the Bristol Twilight League will not solicit funds for the forthcoming season. This was decided at a meeting of the circuit, held Tuesday evening, in St. Ann's clubhouse, with President Thomas Juno presiding.

It is most likely that the same teams that were in the loop last season will operate this year. Five of the clubs had representatives present Tuesday, namely: St. Ann's, Rohm & Haas, William H. Grundy Co., Inc., Odd Fellows, and Superior Zinc Corporation. The Hibernians were not represented.

The managers discussed plans for the season and several expressed the desire to add two more clubs to the circuit. This matter will be voted upon at the next meeting. The managers are also planning to cut the player limit from 18 to 15 players.

It was definitely decided to award individual trophies this season besides those given to the champions and runner-up. The leading batter, leading home run slugger, leading pitcher, best sport, and several others will be awarded trophies at the close of the season.

Those present were: St. Ann's, Charles Liebra; Rohm & Haas, Andy Pfaffenrath; Odd Fellows, Robert Sutton; Grundy's Roy Fry, and Superior Zinc, Peter Bornice.

The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, March 29th.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Mar. 17—(INS)—Because 14-year-old Colin Lewis of Modesto can hang by his toes, Bobby Harmon, 14, is alive today.

The two boys were playing near a cement tank containing several feet of water when Bobby toppled over backwards, fracturing his knee cap.

With the aid of a two-by-four plank and hanging suspended by his toes, Colin pulled Bobby out.

TOURNEY PLAY RESUMES; SEMI-FINALS TONIGHT

By Louis Tomlinson

SOUTHAMPTON, Mar. 17—After a day's rest from activity, the Bucks County "Class B" basketball tournament will swing back into action with the semi-finals listed on tonight's schedule here. Those who will clash in these tilts were the favorites in the opening round, Bensalem, Fallsington, Newtown, and Southampton, who ran true to expectations in dropping their opponents out of the semi-finals. The victims of these teams were New Hope, Springfield, Yardley and Buckingham High quintets.

The wind-up fray last night brought together two arch rivals in Bucks County, Bensalem and Southampton, in the first tilt of the first round of play. Finding themselves on the short end of an 18-6 count when the first half ended, the Buccaneers opened up with a shower of twin-pointers and fouls to come within six points of the Grayhounds, but they failed to maintain their killing pace of the third period through the last session and since they counted only one point, they dropped the tilt, 29-20.

Tonight's Schedule
Bensalem vs Fallsington

Newtown vs Southampton

Washington Snapshots

The little business men, it seems, are unwilling to end the song and let only the memory linger on.

It's been a month now since the outspoken little men of industry tramped out on the Capital stage and awed the spectators with their unheeded performance, but apparently they did not go home to rest on their laurels. Secretary of Commerce Roper has the evidence. He is still getting about 200

BRISTOL HOCKEY TEAM, 1936-37-38

Sunday night at the Bristol hockey rink, after the game, some of the Bristol fans were talking to Lawrence McCoy, manager of the Bristol roller hockey team. He said, "We claim the Eastern hockey championship." He was asked, "On what grounds do you base your claim?" The answer was, "Well, we have defeated every team that was in the Eastern Hockey League, which disbanded in 1932. We have defeated such teams as Pottstown, Philadelphia, Quakers, Carlisle, Chester. Those are the major Pennsylvania teams. Jersey City, the Jersey State champs; New Brunswick, Newark, Atlantic City, Trenton. We have won 19 games, tied 2 and lost 3. We have the record of scoring 102 points to our opponents' 44. We were never defeated by more than one point, but won games by as high as 19 points."

The next question asked McCoy was, "What do you consider the most powerful line-up of the team?" "Pat Nelson Campbell in the goal, Bill Ritter on one defense, Rabbit Remer on the other, George Ritter and Sam Leeper up on wing positions, and Mush Higgins in the center. This will give you a line-up that will make any team think fast." Unfortunately, when the picture was taken Mush Higgins and Francis O'Boyle were unable to be on hand.

letters a day from these "little fellows," who, during their conference in Washington last month, adopted resolutions particularly critical of many Federal policies, especially those dealing with taxation and regulation and the "antagonistic attitude toward industry."

To date, about 5,000 letters have been dropped into the Commerce Department's mail box, but apparently any analysis of the contents is to be kept an administration secret. Secretary Roper recently said 1,900 of the letters had been analyzed for the President, but declined to make the analysis public.

One significant inkling as to what the letters reveal was seen by many Washington correspondents in Mr. Roper's only comment when the analysis was sent to the White House. He said then that apparently the Nation does not favor any "long-term plans for control of production, either agricultural or industrial."

When the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the House Appropriations Committee last week, he explained that a $50,000 item in his budget requirements was for a new publicity section. He jestingly said he thought it necessary because the Interior Department had not been able to make page one in the newspapers since the "blue bathroom" episode several months ago! At that time there was considerable comment about the luxurious private bath in the Secretary's newly built private office suite which also includes a kitchen.

The committee denied the request. The House, however, reinstated the item.

For those who relish statistics: A total of about 1,176,000 words were spoken in the 46-day filibuster against the anti-lynching bill in the Senate; gallery employees counted 140 hours of actual debate and 49 roll calls; and Senator Ellender, of Louisiana, was the marathon performer, speaking against the bill for 49 hours, including one stretch of six daily sessions.

The deficiency measure giving the WPA an additional $250,000,000 for operations until June 30 is worth about three million dollars per word. Less than 90 words in length, the bill is one of the shortest ever tossed into the Congressional hopper.

It came too late to influence the farm bill one way or the other, but a telegram that a doctor in Iowa sent one of the Iowa Senators brought considerable laughter in the Senate cloak rooms last week. Addressed to Senator Gillette, it read: "Haven't read farm control law in its entirety, but we can't help wondering if farmer is allotted one calf and his cow has twins, whether law specifies that the officials shoot a calf, the cow, the farmer or the bull."

After showing the telegram to several of his colleagues Senator Gillette wired back: "The proper course would be to shoot the farmer's Senator."

ALL IN A WEEK.—As the public debt touched a new high of $37,632,120,451, into the Senate hopper was dropped a bill for the relief of Charles McCarthy!

Sweet potatoes now are being used to make starch for industrial purposes, particularly for the sizing of cotton cloth.

Where Major League Teams Spend $500,000

By TOM FERGUSON
International Illustrated News Writer

NEW YORK—The half-million-dollar annual invasion of the southland is under way again.

Well-ballyhooed, 13 major league baseball teams, with accompanying sports writers, club officials, trainers and sundry hangers-on, have pitched camps on southern soil. The other three have established bases on the Pacific coast. The announced purpose is to train for the coming pennant campaign, but one of the major reasons for the trips is to prepare the fans for the season, too. Followers of baseball, as well as the players themselves, have to be conditioned for the 154-game grind!

Giants to Hawaii?

While all the training camps are within the borders of the United States this year, such is not always the case. In the past teams have journeyed to Cuba, Mexico and Puerto Rico. There is talk that next year the New York Giants may go to Hawaii. If they do, the venture will be the height of something—probably expense. And the newspapers probably will not regard the plan with too much favor.

Cables from Hawaii cost money.

That expense item is a big one for the clubs. They usually spend from $30,000 to $50,000 or more for their preliminary sun-tan. All of the clubs, of course, count on getting part of this back from the gate receipts at exhibition games, but relatively few show a profit. Since club owners, on the whole, are in the business to make money and not to spend it recklessly, they must figure that in the long run the training trips pay good returns.

Fairly certain to show a sizeable income from the exhibition games are the Giants and the Indians, with Bob Feller as star attraction. The two teams will wind their way through cities and towns of the south, playing their usual spring tournament. Last year when the Indians and Giants hit a town the natives flocked in droves to the local ball pasture to see the much-hailed Feller.

The Fight for Jobs

Each ball team takes along with it to camp a number of rookies—a dozen or two—one of the big reasons for the training season. Managers have an opportunity to see the new prodigies in action, to judge their merits first hand and decide whether they will stick or return to the minors, permanently, or for seasoning. Records as well as training camp performances, are carefully considered. Competition between the recruits and the aging veterans for the available positions on a team furnish much of the material for the stories the fans back home read.

Baseball's first training camp was established by Pop Anson, manager of the Chicago Nationals, back in 1886. He ordered his nearest winners to Hot Springs to wear off surplus weight which too much beer had dropped on their shoulders over the winter. The idea was to start the spring season on a new and better spring. The first spring camp in that year was at Hot Springs, Ark. In that year the Baltimore Orioles took the Baltimore Orioles to Miami, Fla.

It was left to John McGraw's New York Giants to start the training season in its present scope. He took a team as far as Los Angeles in 1907, built up drama around the fight of the players for position, and induced the better hotels to accept ball players as guests. Now they travel in private cars, stay at the best hotels and eat the finest foods.
